An A-level course in French and/or Spanish is very different from a GCSE course in a language. The topics are more adult e.g. Family and Society, Technology, Politics, Culture and The Media including Film Studies. It will be an asset to you for any University course whether the language is studied at degree level or whether you choose a language as an additional subject. It is also seen very positively by employers.

A-level will help you to develop your existing language skills to a higher level of competence. You should want to spend some time in the country whose language you are studying, for example, taking part in a work experience and developing your interest in the wider issues affecting that country.

Reading

You will be able to read/understand and extract information from written passages in the target language taken from authentic sources, such as magazines and newspaper reports or books.

Listening

You will be able to listen to and understand contemporary spoken language and answer questions on what you have heard. The passages will be taken from a range of sources such as news reports, interviews and discussions.

Speaking and writing

You will learn how to hold conversations and how to write essays and discuss in the target language.

Who is the course for?

- Students who want to do a degree course in languages, or those who wish to pursue a higher education course in another subject, but choose a language option alongside it.
- Having a language at A-level will improve your employability, in particular with companies which have international branches and is an excellent step towards achieving your goals.

Modern Languages French and/or Spanish

“I decided to take A-level in a language as I had such a fascination with the culture and wanted to further the knowledge I had at GCSE. The A-level course really appealed to me as it allows you to learn about history, politics, gastronomy and more. There is more depth and freedom in the A-level course than at GCSE. I have really enjoyed improving my language skills and I intend to study abroad during my time at University.”

“Learning a language broadens your horizons. In an ever competitive world it really will give you extra skills that others may not have. Lessons are not only about the grammar of the language but also the history; sociology; politics and culture of the countries where your chosen language is spoken. Choosing a language as a subsidiary option adds valuable points to a degree helping with your final degree classification. A language is like riding a bicycle. It will stay with you. Can you risk being without one in today’s world?”
